

Richard Myles, Sr., CEO, Founder, & Chairman

In 1993, Myles, founded the Minor Football League (MFL) to serve youth in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area. The 501(c)3 nonprofit organization, was designed to provide an opportunity for athletic participation that does not ordinarily exist outside of college or professional sports. Each member of a MFL team must be involved in the community where it is based. The expectation is that a player will perform a minimum of 12 days of community service per year.

An NFL veteran and sociology major who graduated from Arizona State, Myles uses both his professional and academic experience to develop and implement drug prevention, violence reduction and conflict resolution programs for youth eight to 18. Mr. Myles is an entrepreneur that has based his organization a platform of integrity and a commitment to excellence in every thing they do.

Myles spent a great deal of his spare time volunteering for children's programs. He has sponsored and coached Special Olympics teams and has worked as a director for the State of Maryland Parks and Planning, overseeing programs in various recreational youth centers.
